Looking at my resume, you would think that I had it all. I went to university at the age of 16, earned two bachelor's degrees by the age of 20, and graduated from law school at the age of 23. I am now 8 years into my career, and I work for a well-known tech company.\n\nHowever, my resume doesn't state that I failed the…	"When you grow up, you will become a doctor." It was a command, not a request, from my parents, and one that became part of my identity growing up.\n\nTLDR: I did not become a doctor.\n\nDespite being a good student in grade school, college kicked my butt. I barely passed my medic…	I am a Chinese immigrant, and I am proud of it.\n\nFor years, I tried to suppress my cultural identity in order to fit in. I practiced English so that I wouldn't have an accent. I changed my name so that it would be easier for people to pronounce. I gave up my Chinese citizenship so that I could have better job prospects as a U.S.…

Today and every day I am thankful for my wonderful colleagues on the Legal Team at #LyraHealth . The compassion, collaboration, and consistency that I have seen from this team is unrivaled. In my past eight months working for Lyra, I feel reassured knowing that my work family always has my back.
